PREFACE TO THE FIRST AMERICAN EDITION.

THE twenty-fifth French edition, which is the basis of ours, contains above two thousand more words than the best English editions. It has been our care to enrich this vocabulary with as many more words, and idiomatical phrases, selected from the most esteemed French Dictionaries, and in performing the laborious task of examining every word and definition, and comparing them with other dictionaries, we have been enabled to correct many thousand errors which had crept into former editions. In our vocabulary will be found every word contained in that of the Academy, with a great many others not received by them, although used by very respectable modern writers. There is also a very large number of mercantile and naturical words and phrases, and many professional and scientifick terms, which often occurrin works not precede rejections. cur in works not properly scientifick.

The editor is aware that all rules for teaching the pronunciation of a language must be imperfect; but much assistance may undoubtedly be obtained in this way, and he trusts that the system of the Abbé Tardy, so justly celebrated, with the introductory remarks of the Abbé D'Olivet, will be found extremely useful. The rapid sale of the pocket dictionary to which the pronunciation of Tardy is annexed, encourages the editor to hope that, connected with a mere complete vocabulary, it will be far more acceptable to the student. It may also be reserved, that although the course of Parceirs attacked to the full of this distinguisty, we if the marked, that although the name of Boyer is attached to the title of this dictionary, yet if the latest editions be compared with those which preceded them, it will appear that very little

The plan we have adopted in regard to adjectives is more convenient than that hitherto followed. The adjectives which in the masculine end in e mute are of both genders. For example; Aride will be found in our dictionary AVIDE, adj. which signifies that the word is both masculine and feminine. Most adjectives, however, require the addition of an e mute to form their feminine, and fins is indicated by an e placed after them. Turn to Grand, and you will find, Grand, E, adj. which signifies that the adjective Grand for the masculine becomes Grande in the feminine. So Esting, E, adj. means that the adjective Esting becomes Estinge in the feminine, and so with all others of this class. There are some adjectives which, terminating in a consonant, require that consonant to be doubled before the e is added. Thus Net, Te, adj. signifies that the adjective Met, masculine, becomes Nette in the feminine. So Gros, se, adj. etc. Some adjectives change their final consonant in the feminine, and in this case we have placed a hyphen before the final consonant, and then added what should supply its place. Thus Dangereux, se, adj. implies that the adjectives Dangereuse in the feminine. So Flatteu-R, se, Rou-R, see, etc. Certain adjectives or nouns of quality, ending in ear for the masculine, change this termina-Certain adjectives or nouns of quality, ending in eur for the masculine, change this termina-tion into rice in the feminine; we have marked this change by placing a hyphen before eur, and adding rice whenever the English word expresses both the masculine and feminine. Thus DISPENSATEUR, RICE, S. IN. & f. But although the word Protective becomes Protectrice by the same rule, yet each of these words will be found in its place, because Protecteur is Protector in English, whilst Protectrice is Protectress. Other similar terminations are also marked, but they will be understood without any further explanation here.

In preceding editions certain verbs are marked Inspersonal, for this the student is referred to the observations at the word Impersonal. At the end of each irregular verb, also, the participles and the first person singular of each simple tense were formerly added, but as the table we give contains all the irregular verbs, as well as a regular verb for each of the four conjugations, it is unnecessary to repeat what may be found in the table. As we admit but conjugations, it is tuniccessary to repeat what may be found in the table. As we admit but four conjugations, the first in er, the second in ir, the third in oir, and the fourth in re, these terminations are so distinct, that we need not add to each word a figure, to denote to which conjugation it belongs. The table of Chambaud, which was prefixed to former editions, rendered these figures indispensable, for, instead of four conjugations, he recognises ten.

As I and J, U and V, are considered distinct letters by our best philologers, and as no one who ever used a dictionary needs to be thus apprised of the inconvenience of confounding them, as is done by most lexicographers, the editor has consulted the convenience of the student, and kept each letter perfectly distinct.

On the whole, this edition is offered to the American publick in the humble beneathet it will

On the whole, this edition is offered to the American publick, in the humble hope that it will assist the cause of education in our country, and lessen in some measure its dependence upon foreign presses.

PREFACE TO THIS STEREOTYPED EDITION.

The six cess of the first edition of this Dictionary, evidenced in the sale of a large edition in less these of the lines contain the almost entire exclusion of foreign editions from our market, has induced the proprietors to risk the expense of stereotyping it. In doing this they have endeavoured to make it more correct if possible, than the former edition; and as it contains as much, is better printed, and at a less price, it is hoped the publick will have new inducements to continue their patronage.

RULES FOR THE PRONUNCIATION

OF THE

FRENCH VOWELS, DIPHTHONGS, AND FINAL CONSONANTS;

CHIEFLY COLLECTED FROM

The Prosody of l'Abbé D'Olivet, and from the best Writers on this Subject.

A has two sounds. It is long in bas and short in bal. The English have the first sound in bar and the second in bot.

It is long in the alphabet, but short when it is a verb or preposition: il a, he has; \dot{a} , to. It is short in the beginning of a word, except in acre, age, affres, agnus, ame, ane, apre, arrhes, as: and in their derivatives, acreté, agé, etc.

It is short at the end of words, except those that are taken from foreign languages, wherein it is rather long, as in sofa, agenda, etc.

* Abe is long only in astrolabe and crabe.

Able is long in most verbs and substantives, except table and érable, wherein it is short, as in all adjectives, according to M. D'Olivet; and doubtful according to M. Féraud. Custom seems to be in favour of the latter.

Abre is long, even before a masculine; termination: sabre, sabrer, etc.

Ac. General rules.—All final syllables are short, when the vowel is followed by a consonant other than s, z, or x: sac, nectar, sel, pot, uf, etc.

- All masculine syllables, long or short in the singular number, are always long in the plural: des sacs, des sels, des pots, etc.

- All masculine nouns that end their singular number with s, z, or x, are long: le temps, le nez, la roix, etc.

Ace is long only in grace, espace, je délace, lace, entrelace.

Ache is long only in luche, tache, (a task,) guche, relache, mache, fache, and in the verbs derived from them, even before a masculine syllable, lacher, relachous, etc.

Acle is long only in il racle, il débacle; doubtful in all others.

Acre is long only in acre (sharp, sour.)

Ade is always short: aubade, fade, etc.

Adre is short only in ladre; long in all other words, even before a masculine syllable: cadre, cadrer, etc.

Afe, aphe, are always short : carafe, epitaphe, etc.

Affres, afre, are long only in affres and bafre.

Afle is long even before a masculine syllable: rafle, rafler, etc.

Age is long only in age.

Agne is long only in gagne, and all the tenses of the verb gagner.
Ague is always short: bague, dague, etc.

Ai, a false diphthong which admits of the three sounds of the masculine e, has the sounds At, a talse diplinding which admiss of the three solution of the close é only in j'ai, je sais, tu sais, bai, of the open acute é in the middle, and at the end of words, except in essai, délai, vrai, wherein it is doubtful, according to M. D'Olivet, long and open according to M. Féraud; and of the open grave é, when followed by e, s, rs, re, and when it has the circumflex accent: plaie, jumais, pairs, portraits, faire, fuite, etc.

Aie is always long. General rules: All vowels immediately fellowed by an e mune are long: plaie, pensée, joie, etc. Except when there is a liquid articulation as in paque. But many authors change the y into i, and write paie, in which case there is no occasion for this exception.

When a vowel meets any other vowel but the mute e, it becomes short, as i is long in je lie, and short in nous lions.

Aigne is always short : châtaigne, dédaigne, etc.

Aigre is always short: aigre, maigre, etc.
Ail is r ways short. General rule: All final syllables are short that end with a liquid l: érentail, soleil, seuil, etc.

another word comes after it. A syllable is termed feminine when it ends with an e mute, like sobre, aimes, parlent. All other terminations are musculine.

^{*} These rules chiefly relate to final syllables, the sound of which is more easily distinguished. † A doubtful rowel is long when its word ends a sentence, and generally short when Aille is short in médaille, je travaille, détaille, émaille, baille, (I give.) and in all the tenses of these verbs. It is long in all other words, even before a masculine syllable, raille, raillons, etc. Aille, aillir, are always short: paillet, jaillir, etc.

Aille aillen is short only in médaillon and bataillon, and in these verbs nous détaillons, émaillons, travaillons, baillons, (we give;) but long in nous baillons, (we yawn,) and in all other

Aim, ain, im, in. General rule: All nasal vowels, followed by a consonant which begins another syllable, are long: jambe, mentor, bombe, craindre, etc.

But when the m or n is doubled, there is no nasal sound; and the vowel is short: épigramme, personne, etc.

An exact standard for this nasal sound is not to be found in the English pronunciation. However something like it is heard in the word hang. But it must be seized immediately preceding the articulation of the g. With regard to this and other nasal sounds, as on, un, I must observe what Mr. Walker very properly remarks with regard to the sound of en in encore. "If, in pronouncing these sounds, the tongue should once touch the roof of the mouth (as it happens in pronouncing man, men, sin, son, sun,) the French nasal sound would be ruined.

The French standard for this is in in vin.

Aime, the only word that has this termination is short.

Aine is long only in haine, chaine, gaine, traine, and in their derivatives. Air is doubtful in the singular, and long in the plural: éclair, éclairs, etc. Aire, ais, aix, aise, aise, are always long: paire, palais, etc. Ait, aite, are long only in plait, nait, repuit, faite, (top.)

Attre, is always long: mattre, etc.
Ale is long only in hale, pale, un male, rale, and in their derivatives: haler, paleur, etc.

Alle is always short: malle, etc.

Am, an, em, en. This nasal vowel has four sounds: it is always long when spelt with an a, except in comptant (ready money.)
When it is spelt with e, it is 1st. long in the beginning and in the middle of words, and at the end of adjectives, as in prudent, ensemble, exempt, etc.

2dly. Generally short at the end of substantives and adverbs, as in vent, sagement, etc.

3dly.

Short and slender in mien, tien, sien, bien, lien, rien, etc.

Long and slender in the plural of these words, in mentor, and some other words, 4thly. wherein it has the sound of in in vin.

The first sound is heard in the two syllables of enfant, and in the first of encore, which the English have adopted with its nasal sound.

The second has for standard en in vent. Those who can pronounce en in encore, may easily obtain its short sound by dwelling less upon it. Something like it is heard in the word sand.

The third, heard in the last syllable of lien, has something like it in the word send.

The fourth, heard in mentor, has the sound of in in vin. See under Aim what is said of the nasal sounds. In the following Dictionary the three first sounds of that nasal vowel are always spelt en, except after the hard g and k, where the a is better calculated to preserve the hard articulation of these two consonants. Ame is long only in ame, infame, blame, il se pame, un brame; in the preterits, as aimames, etc. and in flamme although the m be doubled.

Ane, Anne, are long only in crâne, ane, manes, la manne, une manne, damne, and condamne.

Ape, Appe, are long only in rape, and in the verb raper.

Apre is a ways long.

Apple is always sing. Jucques.

Apple is long only in Pâques, Jucques.

Ar is always short. N.B. Many except char and proper names, as César, Gibraltar, etc., which are pronounced long, at least, at the end of a sentence.

Arbe. General rule: In all syllables ending with an r, and followed by another consonant which begins another syllable, the vowel is short: barbe, berceau, etc.

Ard, Art, are doubtful. But when an e mute follows the d or t, the a is short. See Arbe, cafard, cafarde.

Are is always long, but becomes short before a masculine syllable: il pare, il para, etc.

General rule: All vowels before rr, which form a single articulation, are long as arret, barre, etc.

Exceptions to this rule will be found in their respective places.

Ari is long only in hourvari.

As is generally long, as in tas, bas, as, Pallas, etc.

Ase. General rule: s or z, between two vowels, the last of which is an e mute, lengthens and opens the penultima: base, pese, etc. but this penultima often becomes short before a masculine syllable, as in peser, appaiser, etc.

Aspe. General rule: An s articulated after a vowel, and followed by another consonant, always renders the vowel short: juspe, masque, lustre, etc.

Asse is long in the substantives basse, chasse, (strine,) classe, échasse, passe, masse, (stake) and tasse; in the adjectives basse, grasse, lasse; in the verbs casse, amasse, enchasse, compasse, scase; and in their masculine terminations, casser, etc. in words derived from, or composed of these verbs; also in these terminations of the subjunctive mood, aimasse, parlasses, chantas: mt, etc. it is short in all other words.

At is only long in bat, mat, degat, and in the third person singular of the preterit of the subjunctive: qu'il, aimat, etc.

Ate, Ates, are long only in pâte, hâte, il appate, gate, mate, démate; and in the preterit tenses, chântates, etc.

Atre, Attre, is only short in quatre; battre, and its derivatives.

 $\mathcal{A}u$, (a false diphthong) has the three sounds of the French o, (See O.) It is generally long and open before a feminine termination; or a consonant at the end of a word; in the plural number, and under the circumflex accent; as in augo, chaud, maux, etc.

It is short in Paul, and before two consonants, as in augmenter, etc.

It is long and broad before re, as in restaure, etc. in all other cases it is generally doubtful; as in audace, épauler, joyau, etc.

Are is short in rave, cave, etc. oftener long, as in grave, entrave, etc. and doubtful in brave and Batave.

Avre is always long; cadavre, etc.

Ax, axe, are always short; thorax, parallaxe, etc.

The French Academy distinguishes three sounds of this letter: the close, the open, and the

But the open may be more or less so. It is a little open in ferme, and entirely so in process. When it is a little open, the Academy calls it open acute, and assigns for its standard the first e in trompette. Dumarsais, and others, call it the common or middle e: when it is entirely open, it is called open grave. Therefore we must distinguish three masculine és, viz. the close, the open acute, and the open grave.*

These are termed masculine, in opposition to the mute e, which is the sign of the feminine gender in most adjectives, and all past participles.

The close é is so called from its being pronounced with the mouth almost closed, and from its slender sound.

It may be deemed short, if compared with its feminine termination, wherein the e, mute, obliges us to dwell somewhat more upon it, as is obvious in aise, aisee; but it is long, if compared with the open acute, which is shorter, though it frequently bears the same accent. This is observable in cree, wherein the first e is somewhat more open than the last, and cyidently shorter, according to the general rule which is to be found after the termination ££.

The natural standard for this ℓ is the primitive sound by which it is known in the French alphabet, as in bonté, and answers to the first letter in the English alphabet, as in fate.

The open acute ℓ is so named from being somewhat more open than the close ℓ , and from the acute accent which it frequently bears. It is found in the first ℓ of $cr\ell\ell$, or trompette, and is the same as in the English words, met, ebb; it is always short.

The open grave ℓ is so called from requiring a greater opening of the mouth, and from the grave or circumflex accent which generally attends it, as in après and $t\ell t$. It is similar in sound to the English e in there.

"The mute e is a mere emission of the voice, which is hardly heard; it is so imperceptible, that a man born blind could not find the least difference in hearing froc, or froque, crep, or D'Clivet.

Dumarsais thinks that the articulation of the consonant by which it is preceded, is sufficient to express it, as in mner, and dmender, the explanatory spelling of mener and demander. However, in monosyllables, and in the first syllables of other words, the imperfect sound of this letter is more perceptible, and may be termed guttural.

At the end of polysyllables, where it is entirely mute, it is like the second e in there, and generally serves to lengthen or open the preceding vowel: when it is more perceptible it is like the embattery, or over; and even then the French suppress it as often as they can, especially when the preceding or following syllable has a full sound.

P. Catineau, the last grammarian who has written on this subject, gives the following example, which is very correct: "Quand yous serez le même, yous me trouverez le même. This sentence contains thirteen syllables in prose, quand-vous-se-rez-le-même-vous-me-trou-ve-rez-le-même. In poetry même would have two syllables. However, in familiar reading and conversation, it is pronounced in eight syllables only, quand-vous-rel-même-voum-trouv-rel-nême." The suppression of that e is precisely the reason why foreigners suppose the French speak so very quick.

This imperfect sound is never suffered in two syllables together at the end of a word. avoid this dissonance, it is changed into an open e, in the penultima of verbs, when their last syllable becomes mute, as mener, mone; some words double their consonant, (which produces the same effect,) as tenir, que tu tiennes; others change that e into the diphthong oi, as devoir, doivent.

When the pronoun je comes after its verb, it produces the same effect, so that je.chante, je mers, become chante-je? mene-je? And in this case the guttural e of mener that had become open acute in mène, becomes again guttural in mené-je?

^{*} We confine the sounds of the masculine & to the three noticed by the Academy, because those who have distinguished more have rather perplexed than perfected the pronunciation of this letter. Besides, as Mr. D'Olivet observes. "it is useless to anotomise sounds so much."

E, when under the acute accent, is generally close at the end of words, as bonte, aise : 2dly. in adverbs derived from adjectives ending in e, as aisement: 3dly. before the feminine termination of adjectives where it is somewhat longer, as in aisée; in any other place it is almost always open acute.* It is close likewise in the termination ez and er, when the r is silent; and open acute in any other place where it is not open grave, or doubtful.

It is generally open grave under the circumflex, and grave accent, sometimes doubtful, as will be seen hereafter.

N. B. The following rules relate to the open acute b, and to the open grave, when the word close is not mentioned.

Ecle, Ebre, Ee, Ece, are always short; bec, niece, etc.

Eche, is long only in becke, lecke, grieche, pecke, (fishing, or peach) rereche, il pecke, (fishiss) dépecke, empecke, precke, and in all the tenses and persons of these verbs.

Ecle, Ect, Ede, Eder, are always short: siecle, insecte, ceder, etc.

Ee is always long and close, as in aimée, etc. Sec Aie.

General rule: All vowels before another vowel which is not the mute e, are short;

refe, feat, har, etc.

Ef is always short; Effe, Efle, are long only in greffe, and nefte.

Ege is always long; college, etc. M. Feraud makes it short. The prevailing custom seems to be for pronouncing it long at the end of a sentence, and short in any other place.

Egle is always short; regle, seigle, etc.

Egne is doubtful; regne, douegne, etc. Eille is long in vieille, vieillard, vieillesse, which have the sound of the close é.

Ein, Eint, Einte, are always long. See Aim. Eine is long only in reine.

Eître is long only in Reître.

Ete is long only in zêle, poêle, frêle, pêle-mêle, grêle, il se fêle, il bêle.

Em, En. See Aim and An. But there is no nasal sound in Bethléem, item, amen, hymen, e. And whenever the m or n is articulated, the e is open acute.

Eme is short only in seme. It is doubtful in crème; and long in any other word. However, the terminations in ieme are frequently heard short before another word.

Ene is long only in cêne, chêne, scene, gene, alène, rêne, frêne, arène, pêne, and in all proper Enne is always short, étrenne, etc.

Epe is always long; crêpe, etc. Epre is short only in lépre, etc.

Epte, Eptre, are always short; precepte, scentre. etc.

Eque is long only in évêque, archevêque.

Er is long and open in fer, enfer, mer, amer, hiver: long and close in liger, altier; and in all nouns and verbs, as aimer, berger, etc. when the r is silent: but when the r is articulated, as it must be, especially in verbs, before a word beginning with a vowel, the e is open acute, and short Erbe, Erce, Erse, Erche, Ercle, Erde, Erdre, are all short. See Arbe.

Erd, Ert, are doubtful; il perd, désert, etc.

Ere is doubtful, frère, chimère, etc. but it is uniformly long in the third person plural of verbs; ils espèrent, parlèrent, etc. but it is uniformly long in the third person plural of Erge, Ergue, Erle, Erme, Erne, Erpe, Erle, Ertre, Esque, Este, Estre, are all short. See Arbe.

Erre is always long, even before a masculine syllable; guerre, verrons, etc.; but it is short when the two rr are heard separately, as in erreur, etc.

Esse is long only in abesse, professe, confesse, presse, compresse, cesse, lesse, expresse, il s'empresse, il professe.

Et is long only in arrêt, bénêt, forêt, genêt, prêt, aprêt, acquêt, intérêt, têt, protêt, il est.

Ete is long only in hête, fête, arbalète, boête, tempête, quête, conquête, enquête, requête, arrête, crête, tête: it is doubtful in êtes, and honnête, and short in all the rest.

Etre is long only in être, salpêtre, ancêtre, fenêtre, prêtre, champêtre, hêtre, chevêtre, guêtre. je me dépêtre

Eu; this diphthong has three different sounds: it is long and close in jeune, (fasting;) short in jeune, (young;) long and open in beurre.

The first has no standard in English; but it may be obtained by pressing the lips a little forward, in such a manner as to leave the breath a narrower passage than for the e of over, and by dwelling longer upon it.

The second is somewhat more open than the e of over, and can hardly be distinguished from it.

The third may be obtained by opening the lips somewhat wider, and in a more circular form, than for the e of over, and by protracting the sound.

t No gram-varian, I believe, has ever distinguished this third sound, so different from

^{*} It has been thought proper to adhere to the ancient custom of writing this second e with the acute accent, to avoid the double mistake frequently occasioned by those who of late have written it with the grave accent, in some terminations, as ecc, ede, etc. Those who are unacquainted with Mr. D'Olivet's rules, being misled by the grave accent, give to that e the sound of the open grave e, whilst, on the other hand, they are induced to confound with the control of the open grave e, whilst, on the other hand, they are induced to confound with the sound of the open grave e, whilst, on the other hand, they are induced to confound with the control of the open grave e, whilst, on the other hand, they are induced to confound with the control of the open grave e, whilst, on the other hand, they are induced to confound with the control of the open grave e, whilst, on the other hand, they are induced to confound with the control of the open grave e, whilst, on the other hand, they are induced to confound with the control of the open grave e, whilst of the open grave e, close & all the open acute ones, which have not been subjected to this partial reform. A little attention to the above rule will be sufficient to prevent the mistaking of the close & for the open acute. As to the exceptions to this or any of these rules, the similar spelling of every word will remore all doubts.

Eu, unless accented, is short in the beginning and in the middle of words; heureux, amaster, etc.; it is doubtful at the end; feu, jeu, etc.; and when it is long it has the close sound of eu in jeune, unless it be followed by an r.

Euf is always short : neuf, veuf, etc.

Eule is long only in meule.

Eune is long only in jehne, (fasting.) Eur is generally short, leur, peur, etc.; it is doubtful in cour, choeur, sour; and long open in all plural nouns.

Eure is doubtful, but always open, heure, inférieure, etc.
Evre is doubtful, levre, sevre, etc.
Eux, Euse, are always long and close; feux, jeux, heureuse, etc.

Eve is long only in trève, grêve, rêve, rêver : it is doubtful in fève, brève, il achève, crève, se lève, although mute in crever, achever, s'elever. Ex, Exe, arc always short, perplex, sexe, etc.

N. B. All the terminations of the three vowels, which are not noticed in the other following Rules, are always short.

This letter has two sounds. It is long in gite, and short in ami. The standard for the first in English is ie in field, and of the second i in fig.

Idre is long only in hidre and cidre.

Ie is always long. See Aic.

Ien when it is dissyllabic, both syllables are short, as in li-en; but it is doubtful when it is monosyllabic, as in mien, tien, etc.; when it is long it has the sound of in in vin. See Ain.

Ige is doubtful, as in tige, prodige, lities, il oblige, etc.

Ile is long only in ile, huile, style, tuile, presqu'ile.

Im, In. See Ain.

Imes is long only in abime, dixme, and in the preterit tenses, vimes, primes, etc.

Ire is doubtful: empire, soupire, etc.; but always long in the preterit tenses, prirent, punirent, etc.

Ise is always long; surprise, etc.

Isse is long only in these terminations of the subjunctive; fisse, prisses, punissent, etc. It is long only in the preterit of the subjunctive; qu'il prit, qu'il fit, etc. It is long in bénite, gite, vite, and in the preterit tenses; vites, finites, etc. Itre is long in épitre, huitre, litre, regitre; but short in registre, and all the rest.

Ive is long only in adjectives; vive, craintive, etc. Ivre is long only in vivre (substantive.)

This letter has three sounds. It is long and open in trône, short in noble, long and broad in aurore.

N. B. This third sound has not, I believe, been noticed by any grammarian. However the pronunciation of o in aurore, corps, alors, etc. as o in trone or noble, would be highly improper.

This sound is regularly found before an r supported by other consonants, or an e mute; and before an r alone when its word ends a sentence.

The standard in English is, for the first, o in robe; for the second, o in rob, for the third

O in the beginning of a word, is long only in os, osier, ôter, hôte.

Obe is long only in globe and lobe.

Ode, Oge, are long only in rode, doge.

Oi a diphthong that sometimes has the sound of wa in war or wart; sometimes those of e in there or ebb. It is doubtful at the end of words where it has always the sounds of wa or wă, moi, toi, Roi, etc.

Oie is always long : joie, etc.

Oient a false diphthong that has always the sound of the open grave è, its aimoiént, etc. Oin a diphthong which has the sound of in in rin, preceded by the English w. See Aim. Oir is doubtful: savoir, espoir, etc.

Oire is always long : boire, mémoire, etc.

Ois, oise, oisse, oitre, oitre, are always long, whether they have the sound of wa, or of an

Oit is long only in il paroit, connoit, and croit (he increases.)

Ole is long only in drole, pole, geole, mole, role, controle, it enjote, carole, vote, (he steads.).

Om, on. This nasal vowel has no exact standard in English; but something like it is heard in some. See Aim. In French its standard is on in mon, and it is always long.

Ome is short only in Rome. Omme is always short.

One is always long when the n is not doubled: trône, etc.

the two first. Hence some pronounce bearre, learne, etc. with the sound of en in jeuine, which is a very vicious pronunciation; for in French, as in English, the r generally opens the sound of the preceding vowel. By others, and especially by foreigners, four, areax, generally, jeuine, etc. are pronounced with the sound of eu in bearre, which is no less exceptions. tionable.

Or is always short, according to M. D'Olivet. M. Féraud makes it short only in castor, intor, encor; but longer in all other words, when r is followed by a d or t. The opinion of the latter seems to prevail, especially when the word ends a sentence. Therefore o in or, essor, port, bord, etc. should be placed in the class of the doubtful vowels.

Ore is always long and broad: encore, évapore, etc. But it becomes short before a feminine syllable: évaporer, etc. unless followed by two rr, which form a single articulation, as in eclorrai, etc.

Os, ose, are always long: repos, oppose, etc.
Ossoc is long only in grosse, fosse, endosse, engrosse, and in their derivatives, which preserve the o long even before a masculine syllable: grosseur, etc.
Ot is long only in hôte, côte, maltôte, the, threpôt, suppôt, prévôt, rôt.
Ote is long only in hôte, côte, maltôte, the. The three last preserve the o long before a masculine syllable: côte, ôter; maltôter, etc.
Otre is long in apôtre, and doubtful in nôtre and rôtre.
Ou a false diphthong, which is long in route and short in house.

Ou a false diphthong, which is long in route, and short in boute.

The first has for its standard, in English, the two oo in mood; the second, the two oo in Oudre, one, are always long: moudre, je lone, etc.'

Ouille is long only in rouille, il dérouille, embrouille, débrouille; but becomes short before a masculine syllable: routiler, broutilon, etc.

Oule is long only in moule (muscle,) la foule, soule, il foule, écroule, route.

Oure is doubtful: bravoure, etc.

Ourre is always long; but ourr becomes short before a masculine syllable, contrary to the rule after Arre; courrier, hourrade.

Ousse is long only in moule.

Ousse is long only in pousse. Out is long only in août, cout, goût, mout.

Oute is long in absoute, joute, croude, route; il coute, broute, goute, ajoute, but mostly short before a masculine syllable: jouter, etc.

Outre is long only in poutre and coutre.

U.

This letter has two sounds; it is long in buse, and short in but.

There is no standard for these sounds in English. To form the first, observe the situation of the tongue when you pronounce the English letter a. It widens itself into the checks, so that it touches the first grinders. When the tongue is in this situation, advance both lips a little forwards, shutting them at the same time in such a manner as to leave a narrow ovat passage for the breath. This movement will lightly press the tongue between the grinders, and its tip against the fore-teeth of the inferior jaw, and thus let the breath pass which is necessary to emit the sound of the French u. Its short sound is formed by dwelling less upon it.

United the proper beginning the state of the control of the properties of the properties of the control of the properties of the properti

Ue is always long: vue, tortue, etc.

Uge is doubtful: dlhge, juge, etc.

Ule is long only in brûle, and in all the tenses of brûler.

Um, un. See Aim. This nasal vowel has no standard in English. Its sound is formed by lowering the inferior part of the mouth somewhat more than for the pronunciation of u, making at the same time the opening of the lips more circular, and throwing the breath against the interior part of the roof, whilst the tongue touches lightly the grinders in removing a little from the fore-teeth of the inferior jaw.

Lines is long only in preterit tenses: parûmes, reçûmes, etc.

Use is always long: injure, parjure, etc.

Use, usses, ussent, are always long, except in la Prusse, les Russes.

Ut is long only in fât (hogshead) affât; and in the preterit of the subjunctive, qu'il fât, etc.

Ut is long only in fâte, and in preterit tenses, lûtes, parûtes, etc.

N. B. Few of these rules are without some exceptions. These exceptions, together with the pronunciation of the proper and improper diphthongs that are not noticed in these rules, and likewise the various articulations of consonants, are shown in the similar spelling of their respective words.

But as words are spelt as they are pronounced when alone, or before a consonant, we shall particularly notice here the final consonants which cease to be silent when they meet a word beginning with a vowel.

Directions for the articulation of the final consonants before a vowel or h mute.

1st. General Rule.—Final consonants are to be articulated before a word beginning with a vowel or H mute.

Excepting the above mentioned case the connexion should take place, even in conversa

^{*} No rule is more frequently cited, nor has so many exceptions, even in a publick speech wherein it is more strictly adhered to. On this point, harmony must be first attended to. Whenever the convexion of a final consonant produces a discordant sound, it must be avoided; for as Mr. D'Olivet has very properly remarked, "the French prefer an irregularity to a discordant." cordance."

2d. General Rule.—All final consonants that are articulate a when a word stands alone, or before the consonant of another word, preserve the same articulation before a vowel, untess otherwise mentioned in the following observations.

B is articulated only in redoub, and proper names, even before a consonant.

C. When the final c is articulated, it has the articulation of k.

It is always silent in accroc, arsenic, broc, cotignac, marc, (weight or grounds,) estomac, lacs, (love knots;) in the last syllable of succinct, and of pore-épic, and after the nasal sounds, as have consume the bane, convaine, etc.

However, it is articulated in done at the beginning of a sentence and before a vowel; also in franc-encens, franc-alleu, du blanc au noir.

1). When the final d is heard before a vowel or h mute, it has the articulation of a t. It is always silent in sourd, nid, in the terminations in ona, rond, etc. and after an r, as in fmyard, accord, etc.

In other words it is frequently suppressed in conversation.

It should never be suppressed, 1st. in de fond en comble; 2d. after quand, before il, ils, eux, elles, on, en, a, au, aux; 3d. after adjectives followed by their substantives: grand homme, grand arbe, etc. 4th. after the third person of verbs, when they are followed by their pronoun personal, or the preposition à; répond-il? il entend à demi, etc.

F. The final f is generally articulated even before a consonant.
It is silent, even before a vowel; 1st. in baillif, clef, earf; but is always heard in corne de cerf; 2d. in chef and nerf when used in the following expressions, chef-d'œuvre, nerf de bœufs, although it must be articulated in any other place; 3d. in plural nouns, as bœufs, aul's, &c. except chefs, wherein it is always articulated.

G. The final g, when it is not silent, has the articulation of a k.

It is articulated, 1st, in sang and rang before an adjective, sang échauffé, rang élevé, &c 2d, in these or similar sentences, suer sang et ean, de rung en rung, &c. 3d, always in bourg According to M. Féraud it is also heard in long before a substantive: long été, &c. which he spells lon-kété. The word long before a vowel is generally avoided, or the g suppressed in the pronunciation.

In joug some pronounce it as g in bag, even before a consonant; others suppress it even before a vowel.

H. His seldom, and ought never to be final in French. It has no articulation.

When it is deemed aspirate, "it only communicates to the vowel the properties of a consonant; that is to say: if the preceding word end with a vowel, that vowel is never suppressed; if it end with a consonant, that consonant is never connected with the vowel which follows. To this is confined all the effect of the aspirated H." D'Olivet.

This pretended aspiration, so different from that of the English, is nothing else than the hiatus occasioned by the meeting of two vowels, as in go on, go again.

N. B. The h is preserved in the similar spelling only in words before which no vowel is suppressed, and with which no consonant is connected.

It is proper to notice here some irregularities of this letter.

In conversation or prose h is mute in Henri; it may be aspirated in poetry.

According to the Academy it is better to aspirate it in hideux. The contrary custom still prevails.

It is aspirated in Hollande and Hongrie, but mute in toile or fromage d'Hollande, Reine or point d'Hengrie.

It is mute in huit and its derivatives; however, we spell and pronounce le huit, le huitième, la huitaine, as if it were aspirated.

Onze and its derivatives, and our used substantively, produce the effects of the aspirated h. No vowel is suppressed before these words, nor any consonant connected with them, les onze. the source with the problem these words, not any consonant connected with their test office, less outsideness, &c. le out et le non, tous vos out, &c. although we spell and pronounce je crois que out.

1. The final l is never pronounced in barril, chenil, fusil, gentil, gril, outil, nombril, persil, soul, sourcil, pouls, fils, cul. But gentil in gentil-homme, and gril in verse, take the liquid articulation of gl in servegio.

In conversation, some people, whom Richelet calls refiners, suppress it in quelque, quelque, fois, quelqu'un, though they pronounce it in quel and quelconque. They suppress it likewise after the pronouns il, ils: and instead of pronouncing il dit, ils ont dit, parlet-il encore? as if spelt if di, il-zon-di, parl-ti-len-kor? pronounce i-di, i-zon-di, parl-ti-en-kor?

M. Chambaud observes, with regard to this last point, that the l cannot be silent in reading; and that it would be better to pronounce it always, to avoid double meanings. Since this suppression of the l may occasion ambiguity, it cannot be too carefully avoided.

M. The final m is never articulated when it makes a nasal sound. It is always articulated in hem! item, and in foreign names, Amsterdam, &c. However m is silent in Adam and Absalom, which have a nasal sound.

N. The final n, when it makes a nasal sound, is articulated before a vowel only in the following cases:

Adjectives before their substantives, and mon, ton, son, rien, un, and bien (adverb,) lose their nasal sound in connecting their n with a following vowel; certain auteur, divin tion, when the first word determines, qualifies, or modifies the sound; as the article before its noun; the adjective or pronoun before its substantive; the substantive before its adjective; the noun or pronoun before its verb; the verb before its pronoun, adverb, object, or cud; the adverb before un adjective or participle.

amour, bon ami, rien au monde, un homme, bien-aimé, &c. pronounce cer-té-no-teur, di-vi-na whour, rie-no-monde, bo-na-mi, u-nom, biè-né-mé.

2d. Benin and malin ought not to be placed before a substantive, except matin esprut, wherein malin preserves its nasal sound, and a second n is articulated before esprit: malinnespri.

3d. En and en preserve their nasal sound, but a second en is articulated before a vowel enen entrant, on assure, &c. pronounce en-nen-tran, on-nu-sure. But the first after an imperative and the second after its verb, are never connected; par-lez-en à votre vm, a-t-on appris, &c.
P. 'The final p of coup, beaucoup, and trop, and of the words that have it articulated before a consonant, are the only ones heard before a vowel.

Q. When the final q is not silent, it has the articulation of a k. It is always heard in cinq, when alone, and before a vowel; also in coq, but never in coq-d'Inde.

R. The final r is generally articulated before vowels, at least in reading.

Except, 1st, Monsieur and Messieurs, though it be always hard in le sieur, les sieurs.

2d. The plural of nouns ending in er, wherein the s alone is articulated like a z.

3d. It is often suppressed in conversation before consonants in notre, votre, quatre, pronounced not, vot, qual; but never in Notre pere qui êtes aux cieux, Notre-Dame, quatre-vingts. nor at the end of a sentence.

4th. Sometimes also it is suppressed in conversation in the verbs and nouns ending in er; but never in proper names; words derived from foreign languages, nor when the è is open grave, as in Jupiter, pater, mer, etc.

5th. Some suppress it in words ending in ir; but it is not the prevailing custom.

5th. Some suppress it in words ending in tr; but it is not use pre-tained as in yes, even S. The final s, in reading, is always heard before a vowel. It is articulated as in yes, even S. The final s, in reading, is always heard before a vowel. It is articulated as in yes, even before a consonant, in the words vis and cens; and in the Latin, and proper names, Pallas, bolus, &c.

In any other word, before a vowel, it has the articulation of a z, in which case it is often suppressed in conversation, but this would be a fault in reading.

T. The t final is generally articulated before a vowel; except 1st. When it is preceded by another consonant; respect lumain, effort etonnant, etc. 2d. In quatre-vingt-nn, quatre-vingt-onze, though it be articulated in vingt et un, and even before consonants in the following numbers, up to vingt-neuf inclusively.

3d. In all plural nouns, and in et, teint, contrat, most, tet, protet, puits.
4th. It is silent in fort, (adjective) fort et grand, but articulated in fort, (adverb) fort aimable.

X. The final x is always articulated, 1st, as ks in Greek and Latin words: stix, préfix &c.; 2d. as the s of yes in Aix, Cadix; and like a z in all other words, but only before a vowel.

Z. Is silent before a vowel only in the word nez: it is frequently suppressed at the end of other words in conversation; but these and similar licenses, though tolerated, can never be enforced as rules.

Directions for using the similar sounds and articulations.

1. The figures over the vowels mark their respective sounds. To have them perfect, they must be stripped of their attending consonants, without losing any part of their peculiar sounds.

2. Two vowels in the same syllable are to be pronounced together, and the first shorter than the second. Thus in più-tà, the similar sounds for piùté, the I must be united with à, precisely as in the word hosier, the i is united with er.

3. I marked with the figure 1, is equivalent to ic in field.

4. oo in the same syllable have a single figure, to show that they express a single sound as in mood or good.

5. In nouns of the singular number, the final vowel marked 2, undergoes some change in the plural; thus a-ml, tra-zor, fleur, &c. similar sounds of a-mi, tresor, fleur, become in the plurat å-ml, trå-zör, fleur.

6. The standards that have an u, or an n in Italick type, are peculiar to the French language.

Look for them as directed in the foregoing table.

7. When u has no figure, it makes with the vowel c, one of the sounds of the diphthong eu in jeune, meute, beurre.
8. The three nasal sounds that have no figure never vary.

9. An adjective or participle, whose feminine is not noticed in the similar spelling, is pronounced in the same manner for both genders, except the sound of a, which is somewhat longer for the feminine.
10. The syllables are divided as they are heard in conversation, and not as they are counted in poetry.

EXAMPLES:

Veiller, ve-la; the 2 marks & in &bb; the 3 & in base; and the l in Italick; the articulation of gl, in seraglio. But when it is followed by a vowel, its similar sound must be ve-ler.

Courtisan, e, kôor-tî-zèn, zân. The first 2 denotes ôo in gôod; the second î in fig; the figure 1 and the n Italick, èn in èn-fant; the next syllable separated by a comma, which is the feminine termination of that substantive, has the sound of à in bât, and n articulated as in Poignard, pwa-gnar. The 2 marks a in bat; the 1 a in bar; gn in the same syllable, the articulation of gn in poignant.

Baguenaude, bag-nod. The 2 denotes à in bat; the 1 ò in robe; and g, being separated from n, must be articulated as in magnificent. Guerre, ger. The 1 marks è in thère; and the g in Italick, the softened articulation of the hard g commented on in the note below. Jour, zoor. The 2 denotes do in good; and the z in Italick the articulation of z in azure.

* The g and k in Italick type denote that, between them and the following vowel, a sound like c or y is interposed, the better to unite the letters, and soften a little their hard articulation. This softened articulation of the hard c and k, and g, is noticed in Stele's Grammar, page 49: reproved in Nare's Orth. page 28, as "a monster of pronunciation only heard on the English stage." It is given as polite pronunciation by Walker, who in his pronouncing Dictionary, directs us to pronounce card, guard, kind, &c. as if spell, ke-hard, ghe-ard, or given being the second production of the second pronouncial production of the second production gyard, kyind, &c. This intermediate sound is very obvious in cue and argue, which are not pronounced kou and argou, but as if a k or g were articulated before the pronoun you, so that kyou and argyou, of-

For the same sounds as vue and argue.

The sound of this y between the k or g and the diphthong ou, is precisely that which the French interpose between them, and their u, as in cure, legume; and which they frequently express by an u after g or g before their e and ., as in manque, quete, vainqueur, guette, guide, rigueur, &c. wherein these letters are less hard than in corps, garde, though harder than in cet cité, gêne, gite.

the vowels.

A, s. m. A. Un bon A, a good A. Il ne sait mi A ni B, he knows not A from B, he is a mere ignoramus.

A, is sometimes the third person singular of the present in the indicative mood of the verb avoir. Il a, he has; elle a, she has; on a, one has, people have. Il y a, there is (speaking of one,) there are (speaking of several.)

A, with the grave accent over it, when not a capital, is a preposition, for which the English chiefly but not indiscriminately use, at, to, in, into, by and with, within, at the distance of, on, for, after, according to, etc. Now instead of à le or à la, before a vowel not aspirate, or before h mute, the French use $\partial l'$; instead of le before a consonant they use au; and instead of à les they use aux: A ce prixlà, at that rate; à raison de cinq pour cent, at the rate of five per cent; il sera ici à dix heures, he will be here at ten o'clock; elle est assise à la porte, she is sitting at the door; assise à la porte, she is sitting at the door; nous jouons souvent aux cartes; we often play at eards; il vise à cet emploi, he aims at that place; cela est arrive à Paris, that happened at Paris. Allez à Paris, go to Paris, venez à Londres, come to London; à l'ami; to the friend, à l'homme, to the nan; à l'ame, to the soul; au roi, to the king; à la reine, to the queen; aux officiers, to the officers. Il deneure à Douvres, he lives in Dover; votre charque est à la mode, vour hat is in the the desired very state of the fashion. J'irai à la campagne, I shall go into the country. A la faveur de la nuit, by the help of the night; à force de, by strongth of, the desired country of the fashion. by dint of; au moyen de, by means of. Bâtir à chaux et à sable, to build with lime and sand; travailler à l'aiguille, to work with the needle; à grand'peine, with much trouble; Je n'ai pas encore vu l'homme au nez rouge, I have not yet seen the man with a red nose; or whose nose is red. A deux doigts de terre, within two inches of the ground, or at the distance of two inches from the ground. droite, or à main droite, on the right hand; an contraire, on the contrary. Faites un habit à mon domestique, make a coat for my servant. Voulez-vous que cet habit soit à la française? Will you have that coat after the French fashion? A ce qu'on dit, according to what people say, by what people say, as people say; a mon aris, according to my opinion, in my opinion.

This preposition à is also used in reckoning games: Quatre à rien, four love; cinq à cinq, five all; trois à quartre, three to four; etc. à is also used to express a progressive succes-

A, a, First letter in the alphabet, and first of || sion in an ordinal march, when the word is repeated, and then à is equal to by or and. Its marchoient trois à trois, they were walking three by three, or three and three; pas a pas, step by step. See En.

The following observations will, the Editor hopes, be of service to the student. French Ed.

I. When a verb is found to govern an accusative in regard to the thing, whether this be expressed by a noun or by a phrase, the person (or what is used instead of the person,) governed by the same verb, is generally to be considered as if affected by to (a, said to be the sign of the dative case,) let the manner in which it is presented be with or without any preposition: Elle dit la même chose à mon frère, she tells the same thing to my brother, or (by transposing the person governed be-fore the thing governed, which transposition allows the suppression of the preposition in English.) she tells my brother the same thing; elle promit à mon frère qu'elle viendrait demain, she promised my brother that she would come to-morrow; nous primes à l'ennemi une quantité immense de provisions, we took from the enemy an immense quantity of provisions.

It is from the same cause that an infinitive affected by any part of faire, laisser, voir, our, or entendre (considered each as an auxiliary verb,) if that infinitive govern an accusalire in regard to the thing, the person) son (or what is used instead of the person,) considered as governed by the ouxiliary verb, is often rendered as if affected by to (à) though the English preposition commonly used in these circumstances be by, when the second verb is introduced passively: Cesar fit promettre à Augustia de venir le voir au château, Casar made Augustine promise to come and see him at the castle; c'est un grand talent que de savoir faire aimer la vertu aux mechans, to know how to make the wicked love virtue (or virtue loved by the wicked) is a great talent.

The French preposition \hat{a} is prefixed to an infinitive when the expression which governs it would require a (to) before the name of the thing for which the infinitive then stands, on account of a tendency towards the object, etc. hence, Il sera condamné à rendre l'argent, he will be condemned to return the money (because we say condamner une personne à une chose, to condemn a per-son to a thing.) Or, when this infinitive has a passive meaning, though presented in its active form, in which circumstance it might govern in the accusative a preceding noun bar, bat, base: thère, ebb, over: field, fig: robe, rob, lord: mood, good.

(or pronoun) which is already in one case: La question est difficile a résoudre, the question is difficult to solve or to be solved (here, la question might be made the accusative of resoudre; for, we might say, it est difficile de resoudre la question.) J'ai deux ou trois lettres à écrire. I have two or three letters to write (to be written, which must be written, which I must write,) or, I am to write, (I must write) two or three letters.

III. As the French preposition a, prefixed to a noun, is often found to announce how far a qualification or modification extends, extended or may extend, so, when prefixed to an infinitive, it may be found to announce the same: Une reste à manches, a waistcoat with sleeves to it, or that has sleeves; il aime à la folie, he loves to distraction; elle s'ufflige à la mort, she grieves herself to death; c'est un homme à tout faire, he is a man who will do any thing or fit for any thing; voilà un proces à vous ruiner, that is a law-suit which is likely to ruin you: hence also, un maître à danser, a dancing-master, or a master who teaches dancing.

IV. The French preposition à is often found to denote duty, part, or business, and even turn: C'est à moi à vous prouver, it is my duty (part or business) to prove to you, or I am to prove to you (with an emphasis upon my or I:) c'est à rous à parler, it is your turn to speak, or now you are to speak (with an emphasis upon your or you.)

The same preposition à serves to denote that possession or appertenance which, after a tense of to be in the sense of to belong to, causes the English possessor to be presented with 's (as if a termination) and the English of whom to become whose, when transposed: A qui est cette maison-ci? whose house is this? Elle est à Monsieur Bernard, it is Monsieur Bernard's. This 's being erroneously said to be the sign of the possessive case, see Salmon's first Principles of the English Grammar, where the nature of 's is traced to its origin.

VI. As de, when used instead of depuis and rendered in English by from, serves to announce the principle of action, or point from which one starts, has started, or is to start, so à (to) serves to announce the end of start, so a (to) serves to announce the end of action, or point whereat an action ceases, has ceased, or is to cease; hence, nous irons de Rochester à Dourres, we shall go from Rochester to Dover, V. En.

There it is proper to add, that if, for the principle of action, we use depuis instead of de, we should, for the end of action, use jusqu'a (as fur us) instead of à hence, depuis le matin jusqu'au soir, or du matin au soir, from morning to night; de Londres à Paris, or dequis Londres inson'à Paris, from Londres in sou'à paris from Londres in sou l'action de la contra la or depuis Londres jusqu'à Paris, from London to Puris.

VII. The French preposition à often disappears in making the French phrases Engappears in making the French phrases Eng-lish; for instance, when the principle of action happens to be placed after the end of action: A trois jours de là, three days after; à vingt lieues d'ici, twenty leagues off (hence or from this spot.) Besides, the English lan-guage abounds with compound words, the initial of which particularizes the next; and, to form these, a transposition takes place, whereby the preposition which would be used !

before the particularizing noun, if to be expressed after the noun particularized, becomes suppressed: hence un pot à l'eau, a water-pot; un moulin à vent, a wind-mill; une chaise à bras, an arm-chair; une boîte à fusil, a tinderbox: de la sauce aux ognons, orion-sauce; une bouteille à l'huile, an oil-bottle; le marché au foin, the hay-market; une femme aux huitres, an oyster-woman, etc. See, however, de, Observ. I. as also the examples of Obserration I. here. Again, an, à la, aux, used to alarm or call assistance, disappear in English: au feu, fire! au voleur, thief!

VIII. The preposition for principle of action (de) is often left understood; and in thiseircumstance instead of from and to (according to Obs. VI, (the English may use about, then or; or between, then and: Ils étaient neuf à dix mille, they were about nine or ten thousand, or, they were between nine and ten thousand; for, they were from nine to ten

IX.Sometimes the French preposition à is found rendered by a in English, where it presents a sort of compound word: A bord, aboard for on board; au lit, a-bed for on bed or in bed.

"I" This English particle a is sometimes found before a participle present: he is gone a fishing, il est allé pêcher, or il est allé à la pêche; she is a writing, elle est à écrire or elle

DE, de, prep. of, from, off, out of, in, among, on, upon, by, for, about, with, at, to, through, etc. In order to be ableto determine positively which of the preceding English prepositions should be used in preference, one ought to consider what sense de is used in, and to know the real value of each English preposition. However as there is no word in the French language, that puzzles more an English person than this word de, the following remarks may be of service to the student.

I. When two nouns come together, one of which serves to particularize the other, the particularizing one will generally come in French with de and in English with of, ex. Le rayauve d'Angleterre, the kingdom of Engand. Un prince du sang, a prince of the blood. Un homme de mérite, a man of merit. Now as the particularizing noun is the equivalent of an adjective, it often happens that the English change the French particularizing noun into an adjective, ex. Une femme de rertu, a virtuous woman. Un homme de bien, a good man, a worthy man. Un carrosse de louage, a hired coach, etc.

The English, for the sake of despatch, often place the particularizing noun before the particularized one, which construction enables them to suppress the preposition (or an equivalent) which otherwise must be expressed. That construction can take place especially when the particularizing noun denotes matter, use, quality, etc. ex. Une montre d'or, a gold watch. Une mine d'argent, a silver mine. Une chandelle de cire, a wax candle, etc. Observe, that A bottle of wine, is in French, ne bottueille de vin. Int A wine bottle is une botteille de vin—the first English construction means the quantity of wine a bottle contains, the second the sort of bottle fit to put wine in. See also A, Observ. VII.

See also A, Observ. VII.

The French de, placed between two substantives, say Grammarians and Lexicographers, commonly causes in English the second to be in the possessive case; as la maison de mon père, my father's house; le fils d'Alexandre, Alexander's soñ; le livre de Pierre, Peter's book; but they ought to have warned the student that such a construction can take place only when the second French noun is actually the owner or possessor of what the first noun means: for the construction now alluded to could not be used in the circumstances which have been noticed before; and besides, that pretended possessive case, traced to its origin, is not what is commonly supposed. See Schmonls first Principles of English Grammar.

II. It is easy for an Englishman to render from by de, with pretty good accuracy when he is aware of those circumstances which have been noticed at A, Obs. I. These which have ocen hotteed at A, Obs. I. These precluding the use of de; but it is not easy for a Frenchman to know when his de should be rendered by from. The French de can be rendered by from, only to announce the point from which a movement or change begins with an accessary idea of separation. See A, Obs. VI. VIII. Heace it is that after the description of the control of the co those expressions which denote privation, reception, extraction, separation, exemption, deliverance, derivation, emission, abstinence, de-viation, wandering, distance, birth, origin, hinderance, dissuasion, banishment, or any equivalent, we generally find from (sometimes out of) in English (and de in French) with regard to the thing whence the separation arose, ex. J'ai recu ce matin une lettre de notre ancien ami, I received this morning a letter from our old friend; in, la réception de cettre lettre m'a fait un plaisir infini, as de denotes no separation; as de cette lettre would become cette lettre in the accusative, if the verb recevoir were used instead of its verbal noun reception (for, we might say, j'ai reçu cette lettre et elle m'a fuit un plaisir infini) so, it must be rendered by of; and this distinction points out one grand principle, namely, A verbal noun arising from an active verb is to govern with de (of) whatever would be the accusative of the active verb. As from is sometimes to be rendered by des see des;

bar, bat, base: there, ebb, over: field, fig: robe, rob, lord: mood, good.

and as it is sometimes rendered by depuis, see A, Obs. VI.

III. The French de is used for the English at to announce on whom falls raillery, mockery, murmuring or any other affection of the soul, such as astonishment, etc. or to announce what occasions raillery, etc. and consequently it may present itself at the head of the cause which makes one blush, repent, rejoice, smile, etc. Il se moque de son père, he laughs at his father. Pourquoi riez rous de ce que je dis? why do you laugh at what I say? As de ce que means sometimes because, see the next observation. IV. The French de is used to announce also that cause which in English comes with for (the real meaning of which for is elliptically cause,) or with from (the meaning of which is then elliptically original cause,) or with with (the meaning of which is then be, let it be, with couse understood; that is to say, the full meaning of which is then and the cause. of this is, was or will be.) Hence it is that the French say, it moirra de chagrin, he will die for sorrow, with sorrow; when the English say, he will die for sorrow, they give to of the meaning of consequence elliptically for as the consequence of ; that is to say, he will die of sorrow is equal to this, he will die, and this (his death) will be the consequence of sor-row. Hence it is that as expressions which denote some affection of the soul generally have de after them to introduce the cause of the affection, we often find de ce que when the cause is to be brought in with a verb, though generally introduced, in English, with that, elliptically equal to for this, that; or because; or the cause is this, that. Je suis surpris de ce que vous êtes venu, I am surprised at your being come, I am surprised that you are come, I am surprised because you are

V. The de which is generally used after a passive expression, before what would be the agent of the verb if used actively, is in English generally by, sometimes of (but by is always right.) Now as the English by is most times rendered into French by par, it is proper to observe here that de may be used when no part of the body is necessarily to move, or when, after verbs, which suppose a motion of the body, this motion has only produced a passive condition or situation; hence par after a passive verb should hardly be used in French except before an active agent, I mean before an agent that has some design or particular views in what is done by him, ex. Il est estimé de tout le monde, he is esteemed by every hody (instead of tout le monde l'es-tine, every body esteents him.) Elle étoit autourée de gens incommodes, slie was sur-rounded by troublesome people. Now elle étoit entourée pur des gens incommodes, would be rendered by common translators in this same manner, she was surrounded by troublesome people, whereas the true translation ought to be, she was surrounded by designing .troublesome people, or something equivalent to it. However, when the passive verb, besides its natural government, is to be followed by de, Your we must use par before the agent, ex. work has been praised in a very delicate manver by a great academician, votre ouvrage a lithree feet in length. After a superlative ex été loué d'une manière fort délicate par un grand académicien.

VI. The French du, m. de la f. (or de l' before a vowel or h mute) and des plural, all of which generally become de when an adjective is to be placed before a noun taken in a partitive sense, may be rendered into English by some (or any, according to circumstances,) when only a small portion or a small number is meant, especially with an emphasis: but when there is no emphasis to be laid upon the portion or number whether small or great, those partitive articles may be suppressed in English. Hence it is that we find it a du vin, expressed by he has some wine, and simply by he has wine; and il a de bon vin by he has some good wine, and simply by he has good

Whenever a noun used in the partitive sense is affected by an expression which of itself requires de before what it falls upon, then, for the sake of euphony, the English some (or its equivalent any) without emphasis may be suppressed, and de alone be used; but as some (or any) with emphasis may be rendered by quelque, quelques, un peu, un peu de, etc. so of some (of any) etc. with emphasis, may be de quelque, de quelques, d'un peu, d'un peu de. Hence it is that the French say: il nous a donné du vin, for he gave us wine or he gave us some wine, without emphasis as to the small quantity; and il nous a donné un peu de vin, for he gave us some wine in the sense of he gave us a little wine; il nous a donné un verre de vin, for he gave us a glass of winle (wherein the quantity is determined by verre, glass;) il nous a montré du vin, for he showed us wine, or some wine; it nous a partle de vin, for he spoke to us of wine in the sense of he spoke to us of some wine or he spoke to us of wine (indeterminately as to the quantity or sort.)

After some English expressions of quantity After some Engiser Cyptes of the State of the Cyptes of the State of t things or persons spoken of have a definite signification, the French particle de cannot be suppressed. Hence, il a beaucoup d'esprit, he has much wit; il a beaucoup de l'esprit dont vous parlez, he has much of the wit of which you speak; it a beaucoup d'amis, he has many friends; il a beaucoup des amis qui vous nunquent, he has many of those friends whom you have not.

VII. The French de may be commonly used to express in before any word which im-plies manner. Hence, de la manière dont il se comporte, in the manner in which he behaves; osez-vous me parler de cette manière, or de la sorte? dare you speak to me in that (or this) manner? De is often expressed by in when it comes in the sense of dans, pendant, durant. Hence, de notre temps, in our dant, dardin. Itenee, de noure temps, in our time; de four, in the day-time; de grand matin, early in the morning. In speaking of dimensions, as in trois pieds de long or trois pieds de longueur, if the adjective of dimension be used in English, de disappears; if the noun of dimension be used, de is rendered by in; hence the English, three feet long or buse, bût : jeune, meute, beurre : enfant, cent, lien : vin : mon : brun.

pression, de, in the sense of dans, is generally to be in; in the sense of dentre, it may be among or of, ex. Elle est la plus belle femme de la province, she is the handsomest woman in the country; elle est la plus belle des femmes, she is the handsomest of or among women. We find that de may stand for on in speaking of sides, as in de mon côté, on my side or on usy part; de part et d'autre or des deux côtés, on both sides; du côté de l'orient, on the east, or the east side, on the cast parts, etc. We find also that de is generally used for the English on before an instrument of musick, when the verb jouer (to play) or some equivalent, comes along with it, as in joner de la harpe, du violon, etc. to play on the larp, on the violin, etc. VIII. Sometimes de is not expressed in English. Some circumstances have already been made obvious, not only in the preceding observations on de, but also in the 3th observation on en, which see : the following may guide the student in regard to those phrases which may be similar to them. De, before an adjective belonging to a number of individuals expressed just before, may stand for qui est, qui soit, etc. and then it is often found suppressed in English though it might be rendered by who or which is, etc. Dans ce combat il y eut 3000 hommes de tues (qui furent tues,) in that action there were 3000 men killed. In ce sot d'officier, and similar phrases, if the noun be made an English adjec-tive, de will disappear; if the noun be ex-pressed by an English noun, de will be rendered by of a or of an for the singular, and of for the plural: hence, that foolish officer and that fool of an officer. The reason is now obvious why mon contain de valet may be my rascally servant. In it n'a mangé de tout le jour, il ne reviendra de dix ans, etc. de may disappear or be rendered by for, hence he has eaten nothing this day or he has eaten nothing for this whole day, and he will not come back these ten years or he will not come back for thèse ten years. Sometimes de is prefixed to a noun without an adjective, after a tense of être, because this noun is somewhat equal to an adjective, as in il est de votre in-terêt de lui plaire (il est intéressant pour rous de lui plaire) it is your interest to please him. Sometimes a nonn which has de thus prefixed is attended with an adjective, and then both are somewhat equal to an adjective affected by an adverb: c'est de la dernière folie, it is the greatest folly, equal to, it is exremely foolish.

IX. De is to be used before an infinitive in several circumstances which I shall comprise in three articles; and in the fourth I shall mention those verbs which may be followed by an infinitive without de, contrary to the general rule.

1st. Whenever an infinitive is introduced instead of a noun of things which ought to take de before it on account of the preceding expression, this infinitive should also take de. Hence an infinitive governed by a preceding expression is generally to have de, not only when the preceding expression requires of in English before the thing it may fall upon, but in those 'reumstances (wherein it is to be introduced instead of a noun) which I have noticed in Obs. 2, 3, 4; ex. I have had the honour of speaking to him, j'ai eu l'honneur de lui parler; we forewarn you to take your measures, nous vous avertissons de prendre vos mesures; I do not hinder him from coming here, je ne l'empêche pas de venir ici; I laugh at seeing him run in that manner, je ris de le voir courir de cette manière (the seeing of him run in that manner is the cause of my laughing). I am glad to find you here, je suis bien aise de vous trouver ici (the finding of you here is the cause of my being glad.)

you here is the cause of my being glad.)

2dty. Whenever an infinitive is made to stand where a noun of things governed in the accusative should stand, that infinitive is generally to have de before it, though the noun ought not to take de, since the accusative of a thing or person is to present itself without any preposition. Hence, though we say, to forget a thing, oublier une chose, yet I have forgotten to bring my books, should be rendered by j'ai oublie d'apporter mes livres (I have forgotten what? to bring my books stands here for the thing which I have forgotten, that is to say to bring my books stands instead of the accusative of I have forgotten, there I must observe that a few verbs which govern the accusative of the thirg, will however require à before the infinitive which they are made to govern in order to express a tendency towards doing or acquiring, etc. what he infinitive means: and though we say, aimer une chose, etc. we must say, aime une chose, montrer une chose, étudier une chose, chercher une chose, etc. we must say, aime une chose, etc. We must say, aime une chose, etc. define, montrer à faire, apprendre à faire, montrer à faire, apprendre à faire, montrer à faire, s'étudier à daire, chercher à faire, etc. See also hereafter, at 4thly.

3dly. Whenever an infinitive, which ought sally. Whenever an infinitive, which ought naturally to be the nominative of another verb, is placed after this other verb, because il or ce'has been given to it as a borrowed nominative; it seems that this infinitive, thrust out of its place, is introduced as a sort of accusative case; and therefore it should take de according to what has been observed at the article 2dly. And yet if the same infinitive were actually used as the nominative of the other verb, it ought to present itself without any preposition. Hence it is that, it is useless to speak to me about it, is in French, il est inutile de ni'en parler; instead of m'en parler est inutile, the equivalent of to speak to me about it is useless. The first construction is that which suits best the French genius, which likes to make every thing appear in a sort of accusative form. See A, Obs. II.

4thly. Certain French verbs which govern

Athly. Čertain French verbs which govern the thing in the accusative, will have the infinitive they govern (instead of that accusative) present itself barely without any preposition: such are, affirmer, aimer mieux, aller, assurer, arouer, compter, confesser, croire, daigner, déclarer, déposer, désirer, devoir, dire, entendre, envoyer, faire, falloir, s'imaginer, luisser, mener, vier, oser, outr, paroître, pouvoir, prétendre, publier, rapporter, reconnoûtre, savoir, sembler, sonhaiter, soutenir, valoir mieutex, renir, voir: il affirme l'avoir vu, he affirms to have seen it, or he affirms that he has seen it, etc. Some of these will however be sometimes followed by de and bar, bat, base: thère, čbb, over: field, fig: robe, rob, lord: mood, good.

an infinitive, as désirer, venir, souhaiter, dire, etc. Il désire or souhaite de vous voir, he wishes to see you. Dites-leur de renir, bid them come. Je viens de lui parler, I have just spoken to him. Il ne fait que d'arriver, he is but just arrived.

EMULSION, a-mul-sion, s. f. emulsion.

Ex. en, is sometimes a preposition and sometimes a pronoun. When a preposition it chiefly means in, into, to, etc. When a pronoun, it chiefly means of him, of her, of it, of them, from him, etc. As the proper use of the word en has been but indifferently pointed out, the following observations will be of service to the student. The pronoun en shall be explained in the last.

I. To express those progressive successions which in English are presented with from and then to, we are to use en for to, provided we repeat the word; but à if autre is to be introduced instead of repeating the word. Hence, de temps en temps or de temps à au-tre or d'un temps à l'autre, from time to time. De ville en ville or d'une ville à l'autre, from town to town. De deux en deux jours, every other day.

II. In speaking of time, en denotes that length of time which the doing of a thing will take up, and dans expresses the time after the expiration of which the thing is to begin or to take place. Il va à Windsor en deux heures, he is two hours going to Windsor. Il va à Windsor dans deux heures, two hours hence he is to go to Windsor. Many a good writer is not sufficiently aware of this distinc-

En is also used for pendant when we speak in an indeterminate sense. En hiver, in winter on in winter time, etc. In the spring may however be au printemps or dans le printemps; and in the beginning of may be either au commencement de or dans le commencement

III. With respect to countries and provinces introduced each barely with its name, en will do if we speak indeterminately of somewhere in or inta; but dans should be used if we mean the whole, as well as if the word be determined and particularized by some other word. Etre en France, to be in France. Aller en France, to go into France or to go to France. Instead of en Angleterre, we may say dans la Grande-Bretagne, to express in or into in the sense of within.

When the name of a country or island proves to be one of those which have been discovered by Christopher Columbus, and other adventurers, we generally use an, à la, aux, instead of en, as we use du, de la, des, instead of de. He has been in Mexico and Jamaica, il a eté nu Mexique et à la Jamarque.

IV. As to a city, tawn, village, etc. à is used instead of en if we speak indeterminately of living in or being in some part of it; but dans if we mean the whole or wish to represent the place as containing. Il demeure à Paris, he lives at or in Paris. Il y a plus d'un million d'âmes dans Puris, there are above a million of people in Paris. Mon père est en ville, means my father is not at home (but gone somewhere in town;) whereas, Mon père est à la ville, means my futher is in town (not in the country.) We say en haut, above; en bas, below, down; en dedans, within side; en dehors, without side, etc.; d'en haut, of or from above, etc.

V. After an expression which denotes change, en (into) is to be used instead of dans, even though the noun should be made defined. Elle fut métamorphosée en la ririère que vous voyez couler, she was meta-morphosed into the river which you see flow along.

After any verb which means to consist, we use en with the nouns taken indeterminately, dans before nouns properly defined, and à before infinitives; whether the preposition be in English in or of.

VI. En or dans are almost indifferently used before tout, pronouns, adjectives of number (followed by any noun not of time,) indefinite articles, demonstrative and passessive ad-jectives; yet when we speak of a place wherein we put something, dans is better. Mettez cet argent dans votre poche, put this money into your pocket. We say en mon particulier, for my part. En tout, in all, etc.

VII. In most other circumstances, en, denoting an indeterminate sense, is proper when the noun is not particularized or has not been Il so; and duns must be used to denote that the buse, but : jeune, meute, beurre : enfant, cent, lien : vin : mon : brun.

moun to which it is prefixed is employed in a precise and determinate sense or represented as something which contains. Il est en prison, he is in jail or in a jail (which jail he is son, he is in jain or in a jain (which jain he is in is matter of indifference or left out of the question.) It est dans la prison, would imply that the kind of jail is sufficiently known. Hence He is in Clerkenwell jail, il est dans la prison de Clerkenwell.

We say, Envertu de for by virtue of, and en robe de chambre, etc. for in a night gown, etc. En is often equal to like, like a, like an, ofter the manner of, etc.; hence, agir en roi, to act like a king. Ils se comportent en gens d'esprit, they behave like people of sense.

VIII. En is the only French preposition which can be used before a participle present (it is even suppressed when the participle (it is even suppressed when the participal present is compound,) to express, in, by, with, on, upon, etc. and even while he, etc. when he, etc.; as he, etc. This preposition serves then to form a detached or incidental phrase, that is to say, to express interjectively or explana-torily the circumstances of an action, etc. pointing out either the time when it happened or the manner in which it took place or the means used to make it happen. L'homme vertueux ne cesse de faire du bien qu'en mourant, a virtuous man leaves off doing good only when he dies. Parlez-lui en passant, speak to him as you go by; (en passant is also used to express by the by.) It me dit en partant, que, etc. he told me, as he set out, On a guéri un prince de cette that, etc. maladie en lui faisant prendre tous les jours deux cuillerées de vin d'Espagne, a prince was cured of that disorder by making him drink every day two spoonfuls of Spanish wine.

N. B. En prefixed to a participle present may generally serve to express those actions which are introduced in the sense of at the same time that I, (thou, he, she, it, use, you, they,) or of and mean while, I, etc. Bland-ford enriched himself in doing his duty (while he did, at the same time that he did, and at the same time he did, his duty.) Blandford s'enrichit en faisant son devoir.

IX. The pronoun en is the representative of any noun which (if expressed instead of en) would have de, prefixed to it, or some other word equivalent to de, as touchant, etc. and here it is proper to refer the student to the observations made on de. He will then understand that en may mean not only of him, of her, of it, of them, of the action, etc. from him, from her, from it, from them, thence, hence, from the action, etc. of or from me, of or from thee, of or from us, of or from you; but also speaking of instruments not musical with it, with them, of musical instru-ments on it, on them; and to express the cause at it, at them, at the action, etc. for it, for them, for the action, etc. and even at me, He will be able to understand that en with a passive expression may stand for by him, by her, by it, by them, and even by me, etc. and that with regard to quantity or number, it may be for some or any to denote an indeterminate portion of what has already been mentioned; and in this place I shall observe that en may serve to avoid repeating a noun (which indeed is often left understood in English) after a numerical adjective; as in 27

N'a-t-il pas quatre frères? Il en avoit qua-tre; mais il n'en a plus que deux, has he not four brothers? he had four (brothers is understood;) but he has now only two (still, brothers is understood.)

Sometimes en is an energetick pronoun, the force of which seems to be lost in English; for instance, in such comparative phrases as this. Il en est des héros comme des autres hommes, it is with heroes as with other men. En vouloir à quelqu'un, to have a grudge against one, owe one a spite. Fen suis là, that is my case, that is my temper, as well as I left off there. J'en tiens, I am eaught. ENALLAGE, s. f. enallage.

FAILLIR, få-fir, v. n. irr. to fail; sin, do amiss, offend or transgress, mistake or be out; be extinct; be bankrupt, break. Faillir à faire or fuillir de faire, to be very near doing. Ex. Je fuillis à tomber or je faillis de tomber, I was like to fall, I was very near falling. Il a fuilli à vous nonmer, he was very near naming you. As this verb is il faut in the 3d person singular of the present indica-tive, and il faut is also the 3d person singular of the present indicative of falloir, which likewise denotes want, many have thought that in such expressions as these, il lui faut deux paires de bas, he or she wants two pairs of stockings, il faut should be considered as from faillir: but as in the imperfect we say, il lui falloit deux paires de bas, and not il lui failloit deux paires de bas, it is evident that il faut in the above phrase must be from falloir. It is the same with peu s'en faut, il s'en faut bien or beaucoup; tant s'en faut, etc. since the imperfect is coup; tent se n'aut, etc. since the unperpet is peu s'en falloit, ctc. Le cœur me faut, my heart fails me, I faint. Le jour commence à faillir, the day is almost spent, it draws towards night. Firai là sans faillir, I shall go there without fail.

*FALLACIEU-x, se, fal-la-sieu, sieuz, adj.

fallacious, captious.

FALLOIR, få-lwar, v. n. to be requisite er cessary or needful or wanting. This verb necessary or needful or wanting. can be used only with the nominative il, which so often proves that the French language has an antipathy to whatever is either neuter er passive. Now il faut, il falloit, il fallut, il faudra, etc. are proper to express what we are obliged to do, be or have, through complaisance or custom, as well as what personal interest bids us do, be or have, and what we should be right in doing, as also what, from circumstances, we conjecture must be or take place. See the observations hereafter. Comme il faut, as it should be, as it ought to be, as you ought, etc. and sometimes soundly, haud-somely. Vous faites ce qu'il faut, you do what should be done, you do what is right. Combien vous faut-il, (or que rous faut-il) pour cela? what must you have (what do you ask) for that ? Il ne faut que celà pour or il ne faut pas davantage pour, that is enough for sufficient, etc.) for. Plus qu'il ne faut, more than is required (sufficient, needful, wanting, etc.) C'est un faire le faut, there is an absolute necessity for it, that is a forced put. Si faut-il que, yet it is necessary that. Combien s'en faut-il? how much is wanting? what is the deficiency? It s'en faut de trois pouces, there or very near the matter. See Obs. VI.; see prove useful.

I. In speaking indeterminately as to the person or persons who, and even thing or things which, must do or be or have, il faut, il falloit, il fallut, etc. may be used before the thing wanted (without any verb to express have) as well as before an infinitive. One (people) must have money to go to law, il faut de l'argent pour plaider. Money must be had to carry on this war, il faut de l'argent pour continuer cette guerre. One (people) must study in order to learn a language, il faut étudier pour apprendre une langue.

II. When, wishing to speak in a particular and determined sense, we choose to name or point out the person or persons who, or the thing or things which, must do, or be, or have, then we may use il faut, il falloit, etc. before that thing wanted (without any verb to express lure), observing that the person or persons, etc. should then be considered as affected by to (a:) but if a verb is to be expressed to point out what is wanted, we should use il fant que, il falloit que, etc. making the nominative of must become the nominative of the other verb to be in the subjunctive; hence it is obvious that any sentence which conveys un idea of something wanted should be so turned as to introduce must. Your brother scants (or must have) a horse, il faut un cheval cants for must nave; a norse, it can un cree a addle, il lui faut aussi une selle. The garden must have more width, il faut plus de largeur au jardin. She must write a letter to them, il faut qu'elle leur écrive une lettre. The garden must be wider, il faut que le jardin soit plus large. If, when speaking indeterminately as to the person or persons, we choose to use the indefinite pronoun on, as a nominative to the verb affected by must or any equivalent, it is obvious that il faut que, etc. may pour agir autrement, il faut qu'on soit fou pour agir autrement, il faut qu'on étudie pour apprendre une lungue. See the examples above in Obs. I.

III. Sometimes, although the person or persons be determined in English, il faut may be used with the infinitive instead of il faut que with the subjunctive; but then the person or persons should appear fully determined either before or after, as in you must not give yourself so much trouble, il ne faut pas vous donner tant de peine. If Irefuse to see him to-day, I must receive him to-morrow, si je refuse de le voir aujourd'hui, il faudra le recevoir demain. You are a child, said Blanford to her, you should have confessed to me the whole, vous êtes une enfant, lui dit Blanford, il falloit me tout avouer.

IV. Sometimes, instead of il faut que je, otc. with the subjunctive, we use il faut with the infinitive, and consider the person or persons as affected by to (a;) but this construction can take place only when a pronoun is to stand instead of the person or persons. They have been obliged to confess the whole, il lour a fallu tout avouer

V. Il faut (il falloit, etc.) before voir, entendre, etc. may, as well as il fait bean (il faiscit bean, etc.) mean it is (it was, etc.) fine diversion or fun; it gives (gave, etc.) one pleasure, etc. Il ne m'échappoit pas un mot qu'ils ne le relevassent comme un trait admira-ble; et il fulloit voir l'attention qu'ils avoient tous deux à me présenter de tous les mets, I did Il ne m'échappoit pas un mot not drop one word but they took it up as an admirable stroke, and it was entertaining to see how attentive they were both of them in offering me of every dish.

S'en falloir requires also particular VI. attention. As it intimates of itself a deficiency, so on account of its negative signification, it requires the subjunctive in the verb of the action or situation which does not take place on account of that deficiency. Now if s'en falloir be presented with a full negative, or in a manner equivalent to a negative form, as with peu or with an interrogation, the deficiency is removed or partly removed or becomes doubtful, and therefore ne should be prefixed to the subjunctive in order to bring back an affirmation or an approximation to it. From this explanation and the phrases mentioned before the observations, it is presumed that the full force of s'en falloir will easily be recognised in the following phrases. Tant s'en faut que in the following phrases. That s'en faut que je le chérisse, qu'au contraire je le luis mortellement, so far from loving him, I mortally hate him. It s'en faut bien (beaucoup or de beaucoup) qu'il me plaise, he is far from pleasing me, he does not please me by a great deal. Peu s'en fallut (il s'en fallut peu, il ne s'en fallut guère, il ne s'en fallut de rien) que je ne tomhasse, I was very near falling, a little more and I had fallen.

N. B. Though gens be masculine of itself, yet the adjective belonging to it, if not ending with emute in the masculine, is to be made feminine, when to be placed immediately before gens; observe however with regard to tout, that, if placed before les gens simply, it is to be tous; and also when an adjective ending with e mute in the masculine is to be between les and gens; but that as any other ad-jective immediately before gens must be made feminine, so toutes must also be used before les instead of tous. A following relative pronoun or adjective is notwithstanding to be in the masculine. Hence, tous les gens, all peo-ple, every body. Tous les homètes gens, all houest people, every honest person. Toutes les bonnes gens, all good people, every good person. De telles gens, such people. Diverses gens, several people, several persons. Ne vous familiarisez pas arec les petites gens, ils rous insulteroient bientôt, do not get familiar with the low sort of people, they would soon insult you. La plupart des vieilles gens que vous arez connues étoient soupçonneur, the generality of those old people whom you have known were suspicious. When the adjective is to be placed after gens, it must of course be masculine. Ce sont des gens fort dangereux, they are very dangerous people.
